Carillon Mission:

Carillon Communities creates an inspiring and supportive living and learning environment for first-year students. Carillon promotes an environment where students develop a sense of belonging and trust to support their academic success and innovative thought. In Carillon, students consider their own interests and knowledge, and become active agents in their own education.

Course Description:

How do you slay a many-headed monster? How do you defeat an economic system deaf to the cries of conscience and morality? How do you destroy an entrenched special interest that profits from treating people like property?

For three centuries men and women committed to resisting the spread of slavery in British North America and the newly United States grappled with these questions, searching for ways to save themselves and their fellows from the deracinating consequences of commodification.

This course, which forms the academic centerpiece of your Carillon Community experience and which fulfills the General Education requirements of I-Series and Humanities, is focused on a simple, powerful question: How did ordinary people destroy slavery?

As you examine the different tools and tactics, means and methods that Americans have used to escape slavery or try to exterminate it, you will confront a large and often unfamiliar cast of characters that may prompt you to rethink the commonly-held view that the scratch of Lincoln's pen on the Emancipation Proclamation was the signal event in this nation's struggle with slavery. Indeed, this course offers a dramatic conceptual alternative to this triumphal view of presidential courage, an alternative that places the acts of black field-workers and fugitives, of preachers and vigilantes, of white soldiers and activists alongside the familiar figure of our sixteenth president. One of the goals of this course, then, is to remind students that the rapacious diversity of slavery in America between 1619 and 1865 has been matched only by the unceasing variety of attempts to overthrow it.
Expectations & Grading:

You can expect to learn how to:

- Study and debate the varieties of resistance to American slavery—who fought slavery, how, and with what success?
- Develop your critical reading, writing, thinking, and speaking skills to make persuasive evidence-based arguments.
- Work in teams to conduct a community research project on modern human trafficking problems in our region.

In return, you are expected to attend all class meetings and to participate actively in all weekly discussion section meetings which includes posting weekly discussion questions online. Some in-class quizzes and three writing assignments (at least 5, 6 and 7 pages, respectively) accompany a team project designed especially for Carillon students. Project teams will be assigned at the beginning of the semester. With your team, you will complete a contract that indicates how you will work to achieve the project and team goals. Some of the work for the project will be assessed for a team grade and some will be assessed for an individual grade.

Required Readings:

All readings assigned for our discussions are published in the source pack (available for purchase from Prof. Bell). All readings are primary sources, a circumstance that allows students to encounter many of our subjects in their own words, and with as few intermediaries as possible.
Format of Class Meetings:

An introductory class meeting sets out the big questions posed by this course: Why is chattel bondage so difficult to destroy? What does it mean to fight slavery? How do we measure effective opposition?

It is followed by a sequence of lectures and discussions that are thematic though also broadly chronological, beginning at the dawn of European overseas expansion in the late Fifteenth Century and ending with Reconstruction after the Civil War. The course divides this long durée into five generational periods using categories popularized by Prof. Ira Berlin in Generations of Captivity (2003). Within each generational period, we will devote at least one lecture and discussion to understanding why slavery continues to spread, thus providing a useful counterpoint to the species of opposition examined in the other class meetings in each cluster.

A short concluding set of class meetings asks students to consider connections between the story of American opposition to race slavery and the ongoing struggle to eradicate trafficking and slavery in the 21st century United States.

Credit Opportunities:

Film Screenings: We have scheduled 5 evening screenings of feature films relevant to this course. Students who attend a film and complete a worksheet related to it can receive up to 2 points of extra credit per screening to be added to the raw scores for the first assignment. Max: 6 pts.

Field Trips: We are planning two off-campus site visits, the first to George Washington's Mount Vernon plantation at TBC on TBC, and the second to the African American Civil War Memorial in Washington DC at TBC on TBC. Details to follow. Attendance and participation earns up to three points to be added to the raw scores for the second assignment. Max: 3 pts.
